Born out of Summit Public Schools and developed with the Stanford Center for Assessment, Learning and Equity, our program prepares diverse educators to lead the classrooms of tomorrow. Our residents know that student-centered learning is the first step to more equitable schools. Now more than ever, a new generation of anti-racist educators can empower all students to build a better future.

At the Marshall Teacher Residency, we bring together student-centered instruction and anti-racist pedagogy to create learning environments that serve the whole child and meet the need of each individual student.
